THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
FOR THE DISTRICT OF NEW JERSEY

---

TARA KING, ED.D., et al.,	:	HON. FREDA L. WOLFSON, U.S.D.J.
Plaintiffs,	:	Civil Action No. 13-05038 (FLW-LHG)
v.	:
CHRISTOPHER J. CHRISTIE, Governor of the State of New Jersey, et al.,	:	DECLARATION OF JACK DRESCHER, M.D.
Defendants.	:

---

I, Jack Drescher, M.D., declare as follows:

1. I have been retained by defendants as a consultant in connection with this proceeding. I have personal knowledge of the contents of this declaration, and if called upon to testify, I could and would testify competently to the contents of this declaration.

BACKGROUND AND QUALIFICATIONS

2. My background, experience, memberships and scholarly publications are summarized in my curriculum vitae, which is attached as Exhibit A to this declaration. I am a licensed physician in the State of New York, and am board certified in psychiatry. I have a private practice in psychiatry and psychoanalysis in New York City. As part of my practice, I have treated patients who have undergone sexual orientation change efforts. My experience with those patients led me to research and write about the subject of sexual orientation change efforts beginning in the late 1990s.

3. I am immediate past president of the Group for Advancement of Psychiatry, a Distinguished Fellow of the American Psychiatric Association, and served as a consultant to the American Psychiatric Association's Committee on Public Affairs. I am a past Chair of the Association's Committee on Gay, Lesbian, and Bisexual Issues and a Past President of the New York County District Branch, with almost 2,000 members, the largest district branch in the United States. I have served on the American Psychiatric Association's DSM-5 Workgroup on Sexual and Gender Identity Disorders for the revised and recently released Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders, and am a member of the World Health Organization's Working Group on the Classification of Sexual Disorders and Sexual Health, part of the revision process of the eleventh edition of the International Classification of Diseases (ICD-11). I have academic appointment at New York Medical College (Clinical Associate Professor) and New York University (Adjunct Assistant Professor).

4. I have authored and co-authored numerous professional articles and book chapters dealing with sexual orientation issues, including a book, Psychoanalytic Therapy and the Gay Man, and chapters on "Homosexuality, Gay and Lesbian Identities, and Homosexual Behavior" in the 8th and 9th editions of Kaplan and Sadock's Comprehensive Textbook of Psychiatry—one of the most widely used psychiatric textbooks in the world. I have also edited and co-edited numerous books dealing with gender, sexuality and the health and mental health of the LGBT communities. I often speak for the APA to the media and general public on LGBTQ issues including sexual orientation change efforts (SOCE).

5. I served as one of six members on the American Psychological Association's Task Force on Appropriate Therapeutic Responses to Sexual Orientation. The Task Force issued a report of its findings in 2009, after a lengthy process of extensive study of the existing research, and drafting and peer review of the findings (Report of the American Psychological Association Task Force on Appropriate Therapeutic Reponses to Sexual Orientation, 2009 ("APA Report")).

SEXUAL ORIENTATION

6. Since at least the middle of the 19th century, scientists had debated the issue of whether homosexuality was an illness or a normal variant of human sexuality. During the social turmoil of the 1960's and 1970's, protests prompted organized psychiatry to scientifically reassess the pathologizing of homosexuality. As a result, in 1973, the American Psychiatric Association (APA) removed homosexuality from the list of mental disorders in the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders (DSM). The DSM-II instead included the term "sexual orientation disturbance," which was replaced in the DSM-III by "ego-dystonic homosexuality". In 1987, ego-dystonic homosexuality was removed entirely from the DSM-III-R, as it was recognized that the term still pathologized homosexuality, and such a result was inconsistent with the evidence-based approach embraced by psychiatry. The World Health Organization later followed suit, removing homosexuality from the Tenth Edition of the International Classification of Diseases (ICD-10) in 1992.

7. Once homosexuality was no longer considered a disease, the debate over treatment of homosexuals continued. Two sides with differing belief systems emerged: one side believes that homosexuality is normal and acceptable and the other side believes that homosexuality is neither normal nor acceptable. The first belief system – the "normal/identity model" regards homosexuality as a normal variation of human expression and in acceptance of one's homosexual orientation as a distinguishing feature of a gay or lesbian identity. This group believes that gay men and lesbians are sexual minorities who need protection from discriminatory practices, including changing laws based on characterizations of homosexuality as either an illness or immoral choice.

8. The opposing position operates from an "illness/behavior model". This model regards any open expressions of homosexuality as behavioral symptoms either indicative of psychiatric illness or a moral failing, or perhaps some combination of both. This position maintains that illness and/or immorality cannot provide a foundation for creating a normal identity.

9. Following the 1973 removal of homosexuality from the DSM, professional organizations like the American Psychiatric Association, the American Medical Association and the American Psychological Association, among others, recognized and accepted some of the social implications of the normal/identity model. Position statements were published supporting nondiscrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. The recognition and acceptance of the normal/identity model led some opposed to the model to claim that professional organizations had been "taken over" by "homosexual activists" and to dismiss their moral or scientific authority in the sociopolitical debate. (Jack Drescher, Ethical Issues in Treating Gay and Lesbian Patients, 25 Psychiatr Clin N Am at 607, citing C. Socarides Homosexuality: a freedom too far, (1995).)

10. Other clinicians, whose belief in the discredited illness/behavior model put them at odds with the mental health mainstream, began speaking out to the general public instead. Their message was that heterosexuality is the only normal expression of human sexuality, homosexuality is a sick/immoral “behavior” and not a “normal identity” and gay people are only seeking approval for bad behavior. (Id. at 607-08.) These therapists oppose the normal/identity model and argue that people are not “born gay” and can change their sexual orientation. (Id. at 608).

SEXUAL ORIENTATION CHANGE EFFORTS

11. Sexual orientation change efforts have existed since at least the beginning of the modern era, and are based upon either a concept that homosexuality is a disease that needs to be cured or a form of “stunted” psychosexual growth in need of maturing. Even Sigmund Freud attempted to change the sexual orientation of a young woman brought for treatment by her parents, but reported no success in his effort. In spite of the lack of any empirical data showing proven success, individuals wishing to escape the social stigma of being gay and/or whose religious beliefs condemn homosexuality continue to seek out clinicians who claim they can “cure” homosexuality.

12. At first SOCE or “reparative therapies” were regarded by professional associations as private agreements between individual patients and therapists. It was originally believed, either implicitly or explicitly, that efforts to “cure” homosexuality would not lead to harm. However, complaints about poor outcomes in therapy led to increased outside scrutiny and an emerging clinical focus on patients who attempted and failed SOCE and later adopted a gay or lesbian identity. (See, e.g., Ariel Shidlo & Michael Schroeder, Changing Sexual Orientation: A Consumers’ Report, 33 Professional Psychology: Research and Practice 249-259 (2002)). Increasing numbers of anecdotal accounts from patients suggested that therapists may be doing psychological damage to patients and their families who fail to “convert” and ultimately come out as gay.

13. The use of psychoanalytic and behavior therapy in SOCE was prevalent through the 1960s and early 1970s. Behavior therapists used a variety of aversion treatments, including electric shock treatments, nausea-inducing drugs and having an individual snap an elastic band around the wrist when the individual became aroused to same-sex erotic images or thoughts. (APA Report at 22). Some cognitive therapists attempted to change thought patterns using hypnosis or by redirecting thoughts and reframing desires, but these efforts were generally not successful. (See id.)

14. After homosexuality was removed from the DSM, the use of aversive therapies fell into disfavor as therapists became concerned that aversive therapies were inappropriate, unethical and inhumane. Prominent practitioners in psychoanalysis and other fields began questioning SOCE therapy and its underpinnings in the pathology of homosexuality. Over time, in addition to the non-discrimination policies adopted by the various professional organizations, mainstream professional organizations issued recommendations and position papers that SOCE therapy not be practiced. Concurrently, as training programs for mental health professionals stopped teaching SOCE therapies, their current practitioners are trained in these techniques outside the mental health mainstream.

15. In 1998, the American Psychiatric Association stated, “The potential risks of ‘reparative therapy’ are great and include depression, anxiety, and self-destructive behavior, since therapist alignment with societal prejudices against homosexuality may reinforce self-hatred already experienced by the patient.” The statement went on to say, “APA opposes any psychiatric treatment, such as ‘reparative’ or ‘conversion’ therapy, that is based on the assumption that homosexuality per se is a mental disorder or is based on the a priori assumption that the patient should change his or her homosexual orientation.” In 2000, the American Psychiatric Association affirmed its earlier position that SOCE is not an appropriate treatment, recommending that “ethical practitioners refrain from attempts to change individuals' sexual orientation, keeping in mind the medical dictum to first, do no harm." In that position paper, the APA noted that there are no sufficiently scientific rigorous outcome studies to evaluate all of the anecdotal claims of efficacy or harm of SOCE. But even with limited data, the APA found that it was possible to evaluate the theories which rationalize or support the conduct of "reparative" and conversion therapies. The APA noted that the theories are at odds with the scientific position that homosexuality per se is not a diagnosable mental disorder or some form of psychopathology that can or may be "cured". Similar statements have been made by the American Academy of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry (see its Practice Parameter on Gay, Lesbian or Bisexual Sexual Orientation, Gender Nonconformity, and Gender Discordance in Children and Adolescents), the Royal College of Psychiatrists ("homosexuality is not a psychiatric disorder" and "no sound scientific evidence exists that sexual orientation can be changed"); and the Pan American Health Organization ("Since homosexuality is not a disorder or a disease, it does not require a cure. There is no medical indication for changing sexual orientation").

16. Beginning in the late 1990s, the visibility of SOCE increased. Despite the position of the overwhelming majority of mental health professionals that homosexuality is not a disease or a diagnosable mental disorder, some health care professionals continued to claim they could "cure" homosexuality. In an effort to resolve the question, in 2007, the American Psychological Association assembled a task force (the “Task Force”), of which I was a member, to conduct a systematic review of the peer-reviewed research on SOCE in an effort to conduct an evidence-based appraisal of the potential benefits and harm of SOCE.

17. The Task Force found that there were few studies of SOCE that met methodological standards such that conclusions could be drawn as to efficacy or safety. As to the more recent practices of SOCE, that lack of data caused the Task Force to conclude that “claims that recent SOCE is effective are not supported.” Some of the older studies with better scientific controls demonstrated that “enduring change to an individual’s sexual orientation is uncommon” and that “it is unlikely that individuals will be able to reduce same-sex attractions or increase other-sex sexual attractions through SOCE.” (APA Report at 2-3).

RISK OF HARM FROM SOCE

18. Plaintiffs, and current practitioners of SOCE, claim that aversive therapies are no longer used. Although aversive therapies are uncommon and fell into disfavor after 1973, within the past ten years, I was contacted by a journalist for comments about Mormon men she interviewed in Nevada and Utah who had been subjected to shock treatment as part of SOCE. Although plaintiffs argue that current SOCE is conducted through talk therapy, implying that such therapy could not cause harm, talk therapy can cause significant harm to patients.

19. SOCE has as its underpinning verbal misrepresentations about human sexual development. Typical statements in “treatment” by SOCE practitioners include hurtful untruths, such as “you have a mental disorder, no matter what the American Psychiatric Association says” or “if you are gay, you will probably die early and live an unhappy and unhealthy life.” Or “gay relationships do not last and you will grow up to be old and lonely.” Or “God will not love you if you are gay.” The discredited theories used to explain same-sex attraction include male patients not having close enough relationships with their father figures, or having dominating mother figures, or having been sexually abused early in their lives.

20. Reparative therapists’ beliefs can create unreasonable expectations since an underlying premise of SOCE is that “if you want to change and try hard enough, or if your faith is strong enough, you can.” This concept sets patients up to blame themselves for the treatment’s failure, even though the majority of people who attempt SOCE fail to change. When the change efforts are unsuccessful, the patient is told and often believes it is the patient’s own lack of motivation or faith, rather than any fault of the practitioner or the therapy itself, that led to failure to change. Such self-blame is always harmful to the patient.

21. Additional adverse effects of SOCE are reported in a growing number of autobiographical accounts by gay individuals who unsuccessfully attempted to change their sexual orientations. Some reported therapist encouragement to marry and have children, followed by the eventual dissolution of a patient's heterosexual marriage. Others have reported feelings of depression, suicide, anxiety, and guilt evoked in a patient when the treatment failed. Still others have reported loss of self-esteem, avoidance of intimacy and sexual dysfunction.

22. Even though there is literature concerning the adverse effects of SOCE in adult patients, there is little study of SOCE in minors. (APA Report at 72). Because sexual orientation generally does not emerge until puberty with the onset of sexual desires, the few non-peer reviewed presentations on childhood interventions are based on theories of sexual orientation that assume certain patterns of family relationships cause same-sex sexual orientation, and that encouraging gender stereotypical behavior and family relationships will alter sexual orientation. (Id.)

23. In spite of the lack of scientific studies, minors are particularly at risk of harm from SOCE due to their emotional and cognitive vulnerability. They have limited capacity to participate in decision-making regarding their own treatment, and don't have the legal capacity for informed consent. They may be unable to anticipate the future consequences of a particular course of action or therapy. Minors depend on their parents to make treatment decisions for them, and their financial and psychological dependence on their parents may also eliminate any choice whether to undergo SOCE.

24. Unlike proven medical treatments, SOCE is not proven effective, and may, in fact, be harmful. The therapist is an authority figure to the child, so statements that have negative impact on adults will have an even greater impact on children. Children may be particularly vulnerable to statements that “God will not love them” if they are gay, or, even worse, they are made vulnerable by the fear of family rejection in the likely event the therapy does not succeed. At least one study of lesbian, gay and bisexual youth has shown that family rejection is strongly associated with poor mental health outcomes as these groups were found to be 8.4 times more likely to report having attempted suicide, 5.9 times more likely to report high levels of depression and 3.4 times more likely to use illegal drugs (See, e.g., Caitlin Ryan, David Huebner, Rafael M. Diaz & George Sanchez, Family Rejection as a Predictor of Negative Health Outcomes in White and Latino Lesbian, Gay and Bisexual Young Adults, 123 Pediatrics 346 (Jan. 1, 2009).). LGBT youth are overrepresented in foster care, juvenile detention, and among homeless youth, often because parents who cannot accept children who are gay or gender variant throw them out of the home.

25. In SOCE approaches, simplistic misrepresentations of complex issues are often presented to clients, their families and the public as facts, which results in unrealistic expectation and self-blame. In SOCE approaches with minors, an unscientific opinion based on an unproven theory is elevated to the same level as science because of the child's perception of the therapist as an authority figure who represents the wishes of parents. In such cases, not only is a minor patient unable to give informed consent, parental consent is often based primarily upon their desires to change their child's sexual orientation rather than on sorting out the science and pseudoscience of human sexuality. Some parents are willing to make major sacrifices of time, effort, and money to achieve that goal, regardless of any proven lack of efficacy.

26. Patients may feel abandoned by their therapists in the event they determine that SOCE is unsuccessful and they choose to come out as gay. In Dr. Joseph Nicolosi's Declaration submitted in support of plaintiff's motion in this matter, he explicitly states that his informed consent form advises patients that neither he, nor anyone in his clinic, will provide what he refers to as "gay-affirming therapy" and that clients should seek another therapist [on their own] if that is the goal. (Declaration of Dr. Joseph Nicolosi, ¶ 7.) There is no suggestion in his Declaration that Dr. Nicolosi would refer the patient to another therapist who could provide a different type of therapy. Without a referral, and in need of continued therapy, according to anecdotal reports the patient may feel abandoned, with an increase in depression, anxiety and self-blame.

27. SOCE proponents, after more than half a century of practice, have failed to demonstrate the efficacy of SOCE or to refute the reports of harm reported by individuals and therapists. When there is a risk of harm and no proven efficacy of treatment, the maxim “first do no harm” must come into play when treating patients, particularly minors.

CONCLUSION

28. The position of mainstream medical and mental health professions is that the role of a therapist is to help patients tolerate the feelings that emerge during the process of exploring possible sexual identities. Rather than focusing on a single outcome, the therapist should regard either a homosexual or heterosexual identity as a reasonable outcome of treatment. The therapist’s dedication to the patient’s best interest should be paramount in any treatment. SOCE is contrary to this recognized objective of treatment, and, as repeatedly recognized in the mainstream medical and mental health community, SOCE provides little benefit to patients while exposing those patients to substantial risks of harm.
